

Film maker sends out waves of love

Simone Matthews has been making waves with her short film.

Most Australian short film makers would be ecstatic to have more than 90,000 people view their film in just six weeks and well-known Noosa naturopath and budding film maker Simone Matthews is no exception.

In July Mrs Matthews launched a short film via her website and on YouTube, and since then has been inundated with phone calls and emails from people all around the world.

Inspired to connect people on a global scale, Mrs Matthews decided to create a short animated film that connected people on a sensory level.

“The film is sending a big wave of love – like a Mexican wave – around the world,” Mrs Matthews said.

“By empowering people to come together we can bring unity, love, peace and understanding.”

Her team included a group of local creative people such as graphic artist Naomie Baker, animator Jodie Maymuru and website designer Sarah Ridge.

Mrs Matthews’ brother Owen Arnold did the music that accompanies the movie.

“People from all around the world really connected with the energies and 90,000 people have viewed the movie so far,” Mrs Matthews said.

Mrs Matthews has had offers for the movie to be translated into French, Spanish, German and well-known ex Nashville star Shawn Galloway has also been in contact offering to write a song for it. Mrs Matthews is now working with a woman in New York who is creating a petition for love. For more information or to view the movie go to www.universallifetools.com
